

DAILY PLANET

ALL THE NEWS THAT FITS

Wednesday, January 27

1999

Center's Science@NASA Web site nominated for award

Marshall Center's "Science@NASA" Web site is one of four sites nominated for the Internet's "Webby Awards." Science@NASA is the only U.S. government Web site nominated for a 1999 Webby. Often referred to as the "Oscars of the Internet," the Webby Awards are sponsored by the International Academy of Digital Arts & Sciences. The awards recognize Internet sites for creativity and innovation. Other science category nominees are Scientific American; the University of Arizona Biology Project; The Union of Concerned Scientists; and last year's winner, The San Francisco Exploratorium. The Webby Award ceremony is March 13 in San Francisco.

All-hands meeting 2 p.m.
Friday in Morris Auditorium

Dumbacher named deputy director of Propulsion Lab

Dan Dumbacher has been appointed deputy director of the Propulsion Laboratory in the Science and Engineering Directorate at the Marshall Center. He currently serves as NASA's X-33 deputy program manager at Lockheed Martin Skunk Works in Palmdale, Calif.

"Safety begins with me"

*Safety slogan submitted
by James Turner, EB14*